

Best Practices for Connecting to GunStuff LIVE

By now most folks have already been on a Zoom or Webex conference and already have this worked out. We use Wirecast Rendezvous which software is different than Zoom or Webex but the basic requirements are the same. Familiarizing yourself with this document prior to the broadcast will make things easier.

You will need:

- High speed internet
- A computer with Google Chrome or Firefox
- Alternatively we can use an iPhone or Android in some cases
- Camera attached to computer or a built in camera
- Microphone
- Audio headphones or headset may be needed to remove echo

1. Make sure you have enough bandwidth to upload the session. You can check yours at <https://www.speedtest.net> and make sure you have about 4Mbps upload.
2. Make sure no other in your company are scheduling down time or are doing big uploads that will affect your upload speed. Remember on your end you have a shared connection.
3. Use Google Chrome or Firefox. Don't bother with other browsers. If you don't have either, download Chrome and install a few days prior and get used to it. In some cases we need to use iPhones when folks are in the field.
4. Sometimes other software on your computer may grab your camera or mic and your browser can't use them. Even Chrome may have allocated your mic or camera to a previous session somewhere else, so in those cases restart your computer and start fresh with your browser.
5. You will want a quiet space to minimize background noises and distractions. Headphones or a headset can be very helpful.

Connecting

About 30 minutes prior to broadcast we will email you a link to open in your browser.

Best Method: Computer Users Clicking on the link on a computer will open the default browser. If the default browser is not supported, such as Safari, guests can right click on the link and choose “Open With...” and select a supported browser.

IOS Device If you are connecting from an iOS device, you will be prompted to download Wirecast Go from the app store. This is a free app that is required to participate in the Rendezvous session. Once they have downloaded and installed Wirecast Go, they need to open the app and go through the initial tutorial steps, close the app and then tap the link to connect to the Rendezvous session

Android Users The Rendezvous link will open in Google Chrome by default to connect to the session.

So that you will know your shot is live in our program output, a red dot will appear in your Rendezvous console. This will let you know that you are currently live and the audience can see and hear you. A red dot means you are Live; a green dot means you are in Preview and should get ready to be live.

Our guests either send us product, hi-res photos, adn/or video by the day before the show that we can show the viewers. We just any of these assets no later than the day before your scheduled appearance. If you have testing and evaluation firearms that you would like to send us we will need more time so you should call us first. (FFL attached.)

Our show starts on Thursday at 2PM Eastern. I will connect with you 30 minutes prior to the broadcast via email from c.swainhart@gunstuff.tv My email will have the link you will need to click to get on the show. My cell phone is 859.866.8048 in case there are issues.

Thank you so much for your participation.
